beginning with the colonial era western biomedicine has radically transformed african medical beliefs and practices conversely in using western biomedicine africans have also transformed it the african transformation of western medicine and the dynamics of global cultural exchange contends that contemporary african medical systems no less biomedical than western medicine in fact greatly enrich and expand the notion of biomedicine reframing it as a global cultural form deployed across global networks of cultural exchange the book analyzes biomedicine as a complex and dynamic sociocultural form the conceptual premises of which make it necessarily subject to ongoing change and development as it travels the globe david baronov captures the complexities of this cultural exchange by using world systems analysis in a way that places global cultural processes on equal footing with political and economic processes in doing so he both allows the story of africa s transformation of western biomedicine to be told and offers new insights into the capitalist world system who is an african at face value the answer seems obvious surely everyone knows who the african is it would seem but the answer

becomes less obvious once other probing qualifiers are added to the question how is the african identity constructed in the face of the mosaic of identities that people of african ancestry living within and beyond the continent bear do all categorised as africans or as having an african pedigree perceive themselves as africans are all who perceive themselves as africans accepted as such are there levels of e africaness e and are some more african than others how does african identity interface with other levels of identity and citizenship in africa and what are the implications of the contentious nature of african identity and citizenship for the projects of pan africanism the making of the africa nation and africa s development trajectories contributors to the volume including ali mazrui kwesi prah gamal nkrumah helmi sharawy and marcel kitissou address these questions and more they examine the issues of african identity and citizenship the politics spurned by the co existence of peoples of different africanities in the same country and the prospects of constructing an africa nation in which africans of all hues are as sentimentally attached to as say the europeans are attached to europe though the projects of pan africanism and the making of the africa nation have not achieved the desired levels of success some of the contributors found sufficient grounds for optimism these grounds include the deepening democratic ethos in the continent which is believed will unleash a love of freedom that will supersede the fissiparous tendencies that underlie the various notions of africanity and the rise of new economic powers such as india and china which are increasingly looking towards africa as the next big destination the emergence of barrack obama whose father is kenyan as the president of the united states of america also appears to be unleashing a new wave of can do attitude it is argued that for many africans obama is both an african name they can relate to and a metaphor expressing that anything is possible if you strive hard for it with the right attitude this right attitude is an attitude that is post chauvinism for it is only by being post racial and a reconciler that a blackman with an african muslim father who was not born into privilege could emerge president of the most powerful country in the world this lesson is not lost on africans and it is a powerful boost to the african unity project patrick manning refuses to divide the african diaspora into the experiences of separate regions and nations instead he follows the multiple routes that brought africans and people of african descent into contact with one another and with europe asia and the americas in weaving these stories together manning shows how the waters of the atlantic ocean the mediterranean sea and the indian ocean fueled dynamic interactions among black communities and cultures and how these patterns resembled those of a number of connected diasporas concurrently taking shape across the globe manning begins in 1400 and traces five central themes the connections that enabled africans to mutually identify and hold together as a global community discourses on race changes in economic circumstance the character of family life and the evolution of popular culture his approach reveals links among seemingly disparate worlds in the mid nineteenth century for example slavery came under attack in north america south america southern africa west africa the ottoman empire and india with former slaves rising to positions of political prominence yet at the beginning of the twentieth century the near elimination of slavery brought new forms of discrimination that removed almost all blacks from government for half a century manning underscores the profound influence that the african diaspora had on world history demonstrating the inextricable link between black migration and the rise of modernity especially in regards to the processes of industrialization and urbanization a remarkably inclusive and far reaching work the african diaspora proves that the advent of modernity cannot be imaginatively or comprehensively engaged without taking the african peoples and the african continent as a whole into account
